

SUNDAY SERVICES.

Phoenix Ministers Have
Summer Holidays.

Story of the Translation of Enoch.

Rev. Mr. Riekerson Delivered the Third of His Sermons on Faith—"God Took Him."

There was no regular service in the Methodist Church yesterday—although Children's Day was observed by the Sunday school classes—and there is now no regularly attached minister for this congregation, nor is it at all likely that there will be until after the heated term. Service on last Sunday was conducted by the Tempe minister.

Dr. Pierson, of the Episcopal congregation, has also announced his intention of leaving Phoenix for the summer on or about the fifteenth of June.

The gentlemen in no other profession are so hard worked, perhaps, as the ministers of God, and certainly the Republicans would not begrudge them their well-earned rest.

THIRD SERMON ON FAITH.

Rev. F. D. Riekerson Continuing His Lessons.

The Baptist Church was crowded yesterday morning to hear the third of the series of sermons on Faith, delivered by Rev. F. D. Riekerson, the pastor. The text chosen was:

"By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him; for, before his translation, he had this testimony that he blessed God."—Hebrews, II: 1.

"And all the days of Enoch were three hundred, sixty and five years. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, because God took him."

In my native city—in Brookside, our quiet and beautiful home of the dead, in one of the most charming spots of that little city of surprises—stands a most imposing monument. On a broad pedestal a full-sized human figure—a marble picture of the loving Christ—stands with hands outstretched in benediction, as if it said to some buried saint below: "Peace; sleep, beloved!" In the busy town beyond, for more than two score years, one citizen was the central power of business enterprise. There was magic in his voice of command. He made money his god, and worshipped it with a ministering devotion. He knew no Christ, but human powers; no redemption but a blind, unceasing trust in the mercy of heaven. He recognized no claim of humanity that stood in the way of his mad ambitions. He fouled the air with his God-defying humanity. He left to his children, as an heirloom, the pestilence of a poisonous example. And, when he had gained riches in his age and had burned out the remnant of his manhood with the hellish fires of lust, he died—and with great pomp and display they took his corrupt flesh and worthless bones, and over the heap raised this monument—a hideous caricature, a marble lie.

However intolerant and unchristian we may be in writing of the dead when the earth closes over them, we tell only of their virtues. Judging from what we write, it is no marvel that a child in great astonishment, when asked where the wicked people were buried. But when God puts up a head-board over the dust of one of his believers, the inscription is a living truth.

Enoch lived in a corrupt age, when the multitude sneered at his piety and his unswerving faith, but "God took him." It was enough. The record was complete. It stood there on the high ground of the ages, an eternal monument of God's testimony to holy living. For him who does not please God, who has no confidence in his word, no faith in his law, who will not have this man Jesus to rule over him, there is another testimony. Here the assurance of present condemnation. Here often in the day of decision, Christ will turn aside, sadly but firmly, and write in the book of God's remembrance, the enduring, eternal epitaph, "I never knew him."

Expensive Statehood.

[San Francisco Argonaut.]

Arizona is ambitious for statehood. Her politicians lobby for it in Washington, many newspapers argue for it and her people are enthusiastic for it. The statements by which the appeal for statehood is supported are not wholly of the sentimental or political order. Financial arguments are put forth that seem to pass in Arizona, though they will raise a smile in communities blessed with the privilege of paying taxes for statehood. A writer in the Phoenix Gazette complains that "the present system of territorial government costs the people about $25,000 annually, without a voice or say in its expenditure," and figures out that with a governor at $3000, auditor $1500, treasurer $1000, four judges $16,000, other officers $4,500, "while the legislature would in round numbers cost not to exceed $25,000," the total cost of a State government would not exceed $52,000 a year. The simplicity that puts its faith in these figures appears rather amusing on this side of the line. California has just finished paying its State taxes, delinquents and all, for the current fiscal year, and has bought the right to smile at the Arizona figures. California has raised about $7,000,000 for one year's expenses of a State government, and her people are unable to see that they have any "voice or say in its expenditure," either. So far from bringing the expenses of a Legislature within $25,000, that sum would not pay the contingent expenses of the House for thirty days. There is no State in the Union that supports its government for the sum calculated for the Arizonaans. Little Delaware spends $120,000 on a government that does nothing. Arizona is likely to be astonished at the expenses of Statehood if she gets the privilege of bearing them. But Congress will probably have some hesitation in putting the burden on a community to bear them.

All the Evidences of Enterprise.

[Los Angeles Herald.]

THE ARIZONA REPUBLICAN is the name of a new, bright and new paper just started at Phoenix, the rising town of Arizona. It is issued daily, receives the Associated Press dispatches and presents all the evidences of an enterprising, first-class newspaper. The Herald wishes it success.

Check Full of News.

[Yuma Sentinel.]

We acknowledge the receipt of THE ARIZONA REPUBLICAN a recent Phoenix addition to the newspapers of the Territory. The paper is exceedingly well gotten up typographically, is as full of news as an egg is of meat, and, so far, well edited. We admire the nerve of its projectors in publishing a seven-day paper, and hope the hand of its editor will not be paralyzed by the eternal grind. Were we in his place we would ardently pray that the Sunday-rest bill be resurrected.

Better Try a Butting Match.

[Florence Enterprise.]

The result of the recent trials in Phoenix between the new Territorial appointees and the holdover officials has resulted, as was foreshadowed, in the eviction of the holdovers. We understand that in the case of the prison commissioners an indemnity bond was filed and an appeal taken from the decision of the District Court. If this action is taken for the purpose of sustaining a principle, we commend the self-immolation of the principals as a species of heroism quite unusual in these degenerate days; but upon utilitarian grounds we cannot but think that equally beneficial results would be reached by a butting match to a finish with a substantial stone wall.
